Cavalryman was 'romantic ideal of the Confederate soldier'

J.E.B. Stuart homeplace — minus the home — makes Va. registry

It's rare for a site to be designated as historic without a structure present, but an exception was made for Laurel Hill because J.E.B. Stuart's persona is strongly identified with his upbringing.

> By DAVID REED ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARARAT — J.E.B Stuart IV gets goose bumps when he visits his great-grandfather's birthplace and imagines the Confederate cavalry leader sharpening his equestrian skills on the rugged Blue Ridge Mountain farm.

"When he was a young lad, it was his job to get on a horse and ride eight to 10 miles to get the mail," Stuart IV said.

Although the house where he was born is long gone — marked by a Confederate flag atop a 50foot pole — it's easy to picture the general's boyhood. The landscape of Laurel Hill looks much the same as it did a century and a half ago.

To help make sure the land and Stuart's legacy are preserved, the Virginia Historic Resources Board voted in December to list the Stuart birthplace on the Virginia Landmarks Register.

The birthplace is expected to be placed on the national register within a few months, said John Kern of the state Department of Historic Resources.

Stuart, who was born at Laurel Hill on Feb. 6, 1833, and educated at West Point, was a brilliant cavalry tactician. His daring rides behind enemy lines supplied Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee with critical intelligence support.

Stuart also led Confederate forces at the Battle of Brandy Station, the largest cavalry engagement of the war. Lee called Stuart "my ideal of a soldier."

Stuart's importance had a symbolic dimension as well, architectural historian Dan Pezzoni wrote in a letter nominating Stuart's birthplace for the historic register.

'His daring style of campaigning and his trademark plumed hat, redlined cape and banjo-picking entourage epito-

He died in the Confederate capital, Richmond, in 1864 after being shot off his horse during the battle of Yellow Tavern. He was buried there and is commemorated with a bronze statue of himself on horseback on Monument Avenue, not far from statues honoring Lee, Stonewall Jackson and Jefferson Davis.

The home he had in Richmond was razed to build a parking lot. His boyhood home burned to the ground before the Civil War.

Sites are rarely designated historic landmarks if no structure is standing, Kern said.

But Pezzoni said Stuart's military heroics and symbolic appeal were rooted in the traits developed at Laurel Hill.

One story the family has passed down through generations is about 9-year-old James Ewell Brown Stuart - "Jeb" for short throwing rocks at a hornet's nest. His brother fled, but Jeb persisted until he knocked the nest to the ground with a stick.

"He got stung badly, but he accomplished his mission," Stuart IV said. "Maybe that was a preview of his battle tenacity."

The farm's grassy lanes, wideopen meadows and steep, wooded bluffs overlooking the Ararat River became a proving ground for Stuart's prowess on horseback.

"He probably jumped every log around here and swam his horse across every stretch of that river," said Mike Hayes, secretary of the J.E.B Stuart Birthplace Preservation Trust.

The horse races of Stuart's time tested both the speed of the horses and the combative skills of the riders, with whipping and jostling to dismount a competitor accepted and even encouraged, historians say.

In 1990, the preservation group bought 71 acres of Laurel Hill, the main part of the 450-acre farm where Stuart was raised.

The members began holding Civil War reenactments each October, brought in archaeologists who discovered the foundation of Stuart's birthplace, and lobbied for historic recognition.

Getting historic designation provides the Stuart birthplace preservation group with tax breaks for the cost of rebuilding the boyhood home. But Hayes said there are no pictures or drawings of the house, and descriptions they have found so far are vague.

The group has developed a walking tour of Laurel Hill, however, and plans to convert an old farmhouse into a museum and visitor center.

The tour's pamphlet recounts a portion of a letter Stuart wrote to his brother William a few months before he was killed in battle: "I would give anything to make a pilgrimage to the old place and when this war is over to quietly spend the rest of my days there.

Censoring the South's heritage

THE FEB. 19 article, "Black leaders outraged over Confederate ball," was an outrage itself. It stated: "Black leaders expressed astonishment and outrage, asserting that the event would resurrect ghosts of a shameful era." This old ploy is used to keep divisiveness stirred up between races. Without it, these so-called leaders wouldn't have a following.

An example is the way the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People sets its goals. One would think that jobs, education, housing, teen pregnancy, drugs, AIDS and crime would be of higher priority than removal of the Confederate flag, which the NAACP lists in its first five goals! Weak leaders, such as former Gov. Doug Wilder, need divisiveness because it is the only way they know to achieve and hold the title of leader.

It's a shame when someone tries to deny others their right to honor their ancestors and their heritage, as Southerners always have. Yes, we're proud of our shrines and we decorate our ancestors' graves, much in contrast to other parts of the country. Compare Grant's tomb with the grave site of Gen. Robert Lee's horse, and the chapel where Lee is buried. Only after Grant's descendants threatened to move his remains to Illinois did the government try to clean up the tomb. A Southern organization, the United Daughters of the Confederacy, donated money for the cleanup and repair! This same organization, was denied the repatent of its logo by racists in our federal government because the logo includes the Confederate flag.

How outraged would these same leaders be if they were told they shouldn't be proud of George Washington Carver, Booker T. Washington or Frederick Douglass — that we must rewrite history and destroy any symbol of them?

Before we allow self-appointed leaders to censor our history and deny us our heritage, examine their motives and accomplishments. What gives them the right to declare what's racist and what isn't? Do you really know the true history of the South? True leaders encourage you to find the truth, for they have nothing to hide. Today they want to destroy my heritage; tomorrow, someone might try to destroy yours.

Gallagher has spent several years researching the life of Early, a Franklin County native, for an biography scheduled for publication by Random House next year.

Early was born in 1816 in the Red Valley community of Franklin County near Windy Gap Mountain. He attended West Point, served in the Seminole War and the Mexican War, practiced law in Rocky Mount and served as the Franklin County commonwealth's attorney before joining the Army of Northern Virginia.

Dr. J. Francis Amos, a Rocky Mount physician and local historian, has written of Early: "Because of his unbearably acidic personality, his habitually profane language and general disregard of whom he offended, he was commonly known as 'General Lee's Bad Old Man.' Ceremony to honor UDC for greenway gift

A ceremony will be held this weekend to recognize the United Daughters of the Confederacy's donation of 6 acres for a greenway trail that will connect Roanoke County and Salem.

The land will be transferred to the Hanging Rock Foundation at 8:45 a.m. Saturday at the offices of Woods, Rogers & Hazlegrove, 10 S. Jefferson St. in Roanoke.

The UDC has owned the property at Hanging Rock and Buzzard's Roost since 1960, but lacked the funds to develop it for public enjoyment, said Betty Ann Rice, vice president of the Virginia division of the UDC and also a member of the foundation.

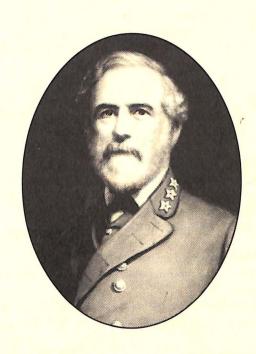

The foundation has received two federal grants totaling $749,300. Construction on the trail is scheduled to begin this fall. Volunteers already are working to clear the trail area and pick up trash.

The five-mile trail will link Salem to the Hanging Rock Civil War Battlefield in Roanoke County.

Juanita Allen, president of the Virginia division of the UDC, and representatives from the Hanging Rock Rangers chapter of the Children of the Confederacy and the Roanoke Civil War Roundtable also will attend Saturday's

God is our hope and strength, a very present help in trouble.

Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be moved, and though the hills be carried into the midst of the sea;

years. It's been quite a few years since they used this as a battlefield."

She and William Jaspar Martin had a son, William. Now 67, he was only 5 when his father died. He said his father never told him stories about the Civil War. Nonetheless, Martin said she was pleased to have her son accompany her on the battlefield excursion.

"Lived and fought'

"I'm glad this boy got a chance to see where his daddy lived and fought," she said.

Martin arrived in Richmond Wednesday from her home in Elba, Ala., to attend the anniversary celebration. And so far, members of the Sons of Confederate Veterans just can't get enough of her.

"She's our last living link to our ancestors," said Rosie Ellett, who has been looking after Martin during her time in Richmond. "A lot of people have come up and hugged her and told her she's added a lot of flavor to the convention."

Standing ovation

The organization gave her a standing ovation at a meeting yesterday. They gave her the Varina Howell Davis award, the group's highest honor. But mostly, they want their picture taken with her.

"People have taken so many pictures of me I can't take half a day to look at all of them," Martin said with a laugh.

She said she was sorry she didn't know more about the war to tell the eager group. Her husband never discussed his experiences in the Civil War with her.

'I guess he was old and didn't care anymore and I was young and didn't care neither," she said.

Still, she's happy to fulfill her role as a Civil War icon.

'A lot of good history'

"People try to keep the memories of things that happened years ago. I think that's good," she said. "There's a lot of good history about all of this."

Her Confederate-veteran husband died in 1932. She married a grandson from one of his previous marriages in 1933. That husband died in 1983.

Martin's status as the last Confederate widow has brought her some fame. Reporters regularly visit her house, and she's appeared on television several times. Martin said she wished she had more to tell them.

"If I could have lived back when he was young, knowing what I know now, my life would have been different."

Cantinieres

Established 1996

Norfolk County Grays, Chapter #2535 United Daughters Of The Confederacy Chesapeake, Virginia

The History Of the Cantiniere

Women have always been an unofficial part of military camp life helping, nursing, and spreading hope to the men. Wives, mothers, and daughters have all followed their men to face the conflict and hardships of the war. During the Napoleonic conquests, an effort to regulate the activities and number of these women was made. From this undertaking, cantinieres (also known as vivandieres) gained official recognition. The main duty of the cantiniere was to provide food and drink to the soldiers. They were recognized by the small wooden cask or canteen in which they carried drink for the troops. When necessary, these women also nursed the ill and wounded, cooked, did laundry, and whatever else needed to be done. The French army limited the number of cantinieres allowed. Each cavalry regiment could have one. For the infantry the number was four for a regiment of ten companies. Cantinieres remained a part of the French army until the late 1800s.

Cantinieres In the War Between The States

During the War Between the States, cantinieres were most likely to be found in regiments where the soldiers were from the same or neighboring communities. These cantinieres were selected to serve by the troops and were often called the "Daughters of the Regiment". Unlike the French army, neither the Confederate nor the Union army officially sanctioned the role of the cantiniere. Therefore, only a handful of cantinieres are actually mentioned on record. Documented cases of cantinieres are more often found in the Union army's records than the Confederate. The reason for this is not really known.

Virginia Cantinieres

Documented Virginia cantinieres could not be located. Women such as Nancy Hart, who aided Stonewall Jackson in his Valley campaigns, and Laura Radcliffe and Antonia Ford who aided John Mosby and J.E.B. Stuart were certainly cantinieres of the day, as was Captain Sally L. Tompkins who helped the sick and wounded and is buried in Mathews County, Virginia. Southern women assisted the military effort by caring for the sick and wounded. After great battles when caualties were crowded into railway stations, schools, hotels and churches, women of the nearby communities provided the soldiers with nourishment, blankets, bandages and other necessities and did all they could to make them comfortable. In some cases the women took the sick and wounded soldiers into their homes and cared for them until they recovered, died, or were transferred to military hospitals. Virginia may not have any documented cantinieres, but it did have women who served the Confederacy.

The 1st Virginia Cavalier Cantinieres

In November 1996, Mrs. Mark R. (Juanita) Allen, Virginia Division President, asked Norfolk County Grays Chapter of Chesapeake, if they would form a group of cantinieres to assist at functions for The United Daughters of the Confederacy.

The Uniform

Cantinieres did not strive to look like the men. They designed their own uniforms in the color of the regiments. The uniforms were hand made. We have done our best to make our uniforms appear similar to the Confederate cavalry uniforms.

A description of our uniforms is:

- * Gray skirt trimmed with three rows of gold
- * Gray jacket trimmed with cavalry designs and colors
- * Gray sash with gold trim
- * Gray "Turkish" trousers
- * Black gaiters trimmed with black buttons, and black shoes
- * Black felt hat with cavalry insignia and Virginia "Secession" cockade and a black plume

Thank you, members of The Norfolk County Grays for your enthusiasm and work.

CHARLESTON, S.C. — As cannons boomed along shore, the Confederate submarine H.L. Hunley finally returned to port Tuesday, 136 years after it carved its name in history as the first submarine to sink an enemy warship.

The Hunley, which sank with its crew of nine on Feb. 17, 1864, after ramming a spar with a black powder charge into the wooden hull of the Union blockade ship Housatonic, was lifted from its watery grave about four miles off nearby Sullivans Island shortly before 9 a.m.

Then it was secured on a barge and taken to a conservation lab at the old Charleston Navy base.

"This is so incredibly exciting," said Marc Ramsey of Richmond, Va., a Confederate Civil War re-enactor who helped fire a cannon as word came the Hunley had broken the surface. "This was like the stealth bomber of its time."

The hand-cranked sub, which was 40 feet long, 4 feet wide, 4 feet high and fashioned from locomotive boilers, is expected to remain at the Navy base at least seven years before going on display at the Charleston Museum.

Previous dives found that the vessel — named after New Orleans lawyer Horace Lawson Hunley, who financed it — was more technologically advanced than historical records indicated. Its spar, brought to shore earlier, could be tilted, perhaps making it easier to attach the powder charges or aim the spar when making an attack.

Scientists believe the Hunley was covered and filled with sand soon after it sank, preserving the metal and perhaps much of the remains of the crew and their personal effects.

The crew will be buried with military honors after the inside of the sub is excavated.

The Hunley was found almost intact in 1995 by best-selling author and shipwreck hunter Clive Cussler, after four failed attempts in the previous 15 years. It took another five years of planning and arranging financing to lift the sub, which was covered by about 3 feet of sediment, from 30 feet of water.

To raise the vessel, divers slipped slings under the Hunley and attached them to a steel superstructure above the sub. The superstructure and the submarine were lifted together.

Before the cannons fired, Keith Purdy addressed his fellow Civil War re-enactors in the Charleston Naval Squadron while Confederate flags flapped in the breeze, alongside the flags of South Carolina, Alabama and Virginia. The Hunley was built in Mobile, Ala., and several crew members were from that state.

"We're giving tribute to some heroes," Purdy said. "We will be proud of this day the rest of our lives."

RITE — The remains of a Confederate died more than 127 years ago lie in old House of Delegates chamber. The body, discovered in Chesterfield County recently by a relic hunter, will be buried in Petersburg's Blandford Cemetery this afternoon.

Tribute strange, touching

By Eric Sundquist Times-Dispatch staff writer

Civil War re-enactments aren't exactly rare in Richmond: On almost any summer weekend, one can find men in gray lugging guns around.

They were out as usual yesterday. But this time they weren't simply acting. For once they had a real and direct part in the war whose memory they honor.

A century and a quarter after the Civil War, the Confederacy was still burying its war dead.

In the state Capitol, at the spot where Robert E. Lee took command of the Virginia armed forces and where Stonewall Jackson's body lay in state, an honor guard of gray-coated, riflemusket-bearing actors stood somberly over a small pine casket. The box was draped with a Confederate flag and surrounded by wreaths and flowers.

Inside were the remains of a fallen soldier who'd never been buried, whose body was only recently found by a someone hunting for relics in Continued on page 8, col. 1

Nearly 400 women disguised themselves as men to fight in the Civil War A woman's uncommon valor

Many women's identities were not revealed until they either gave birth or became ill.

> By ELIZABETH PEZZULLO THE (FREDERICKSBURG) FREE LANCE-STAR

FREDERICKSBURG — On the Fredericksburg battlefield 138 years ago, an unidentified Union soldier from New York was promoted for bravery.

Little did anyone know that five months later, while patrolling the perimeter in southern Stafford County, this same soldier would crouch in the dirt and give birth.

It's estimated that nearly 400 women disguised as men fought during the Civil War. Documenting where they fought has been icult. Two women are known have taken part in Fredericksburg-area battles and historians say the number is probably larger.

As the National Park Service recently commemorated the Battle of Fredericksburg's anniversary, much was said of the men who lost their lives on that bloodsoaked stretch of earth. But what about the women who fought?

"While their service could not significantly alter the course of the war, women soldiers deserve remembrance because their actions display them as uncommon and revolutionary," wrote Deanne Blanton, a military historian, in he National Archives Journal in the early 1990s.

Women were drawn to the war for different reasons, historians say. Some believed it was their civic duty. Others wanted to be close to their husbands. Still thers joined to avoid the limited ions available to women at e or to escape an abusive re-

"For many immigrant women, prostitution or domestic serviune were the only options they nad at that time," said Elsa Loman, a historian with the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Military Park.

Sarah Edmonds fought in the Civil War as a man called Pvt. Franklin Thompson. After participating in the battles of First Manassas, Fredericksburg and Antietam, she deserted in April 1863, fearing her identity would be discovered after she contracted malaria.

"So if they could pull this off, they did just that."

Although women went to great lengths to change their appearances, their ruses were easier to pull off because of the haste with which both Northern and Southern states were enlisting soldiers.

The states "needed as many people as they could get," Lohman said. "That was one way women slipped through."

Once in the ranks, their gender went unnoticed unless they were wounded or gave birth, as was the case of the unidentified woman soldier in Stafford Coun-

Very little is known about this woman, although a letter from a fellow soldier to his wife sheds some light.

Union soldier Henry Butler confirmed what had been rumored about women infiltrating the ranks.

"She must have been one of those girls we read about," Butler wrote. Seemingly unmoved by the spectacle, Butler continued, "I think it was a queer place to have a baby, on picket, but guess things happen in this world."

After participating in the battles of First Manassas, Fredericksburg and Antietam, Sarah Edmonds deserted in April 1863, fearing her identity would be discovered after she contracted ma-

In a written account of her exploits, Edmonds wrote, "I could only thank God that I was free and could go forward and work, and I was not obliged to stay at home and weep.'

After the war, Edmonds married and had three children. She eventually revealed her identity to collect a military pension.

On June 30, 1886, Edmonds received a letter from the secretary of war acknowledging her as "a female soldier who served as a private rendering faithful service in the ranks" and approving her Arguably, the best description of what life was like for a woman Civil War soldier comes from Loreta Velazquez, also known as Confederate Lt. Harry T. Buford.

"My coats were heavily padded in the back and under the arms to the hips until I reached New Orleans. This served to disguise my shape. But the padding was very uncomfortable so I went to an old French army tailor and had him make for me a half a dozen fine wire-net shields. I wore these next to my skin and they proved very satisfactory in concealing my true form.'

While historians have long known about the role women played during the war, the issue gained new prominence in recent years.

In the early 1990s, Lauren Cook Burgess, a female reenactor, was thrown out of a living-history event in Antietam, Md., by the park service.

Park officials said a woman portraying a soldier flew in the face of authenticity. Burgess sued the park service for discrimination, and won.

"It certainly made everyone take a second look at this phenomenon," said John Hennessy, the Fredericksburg park's assistant superintendent.

Civil War was a constitutional dispute

MICHAEL SILVER'S letter to the editor (April 16, "Flag evokes ideas that were dishonorable") deserves correction. He says the South conspired to "overthrow a Union formed out of righteousness."

Actually, the South simply tried to leave the Union. Because the Constitution didn't specifically say a state that willingly joined the Union has to remain, Southern legislators argued they were free to leave.

(They relied partly on the Declaration of Independence. The first sentence states that people who want to abandon their governments to form new ones have only one moral requirement: to declare their reasons.)

The North disagreed and argued that Union membership was binding, yet lacked a strong constitutional argument. The Civil War was thus the settling of a constitutional question at gunpoint.

As for the Union being formed "out of righteousness," was it righteous for the Union to condone slavery in the Constitution or for the Union to deny women equal rights and the vote? If you answer no, then you understand how it's possible to love a flag and the people who fought for it without condoning all the actions people think it epresents.

Obscure Civil War battle marked

MANASSAS — The little-known Civil War Battle of Blackburn's Ford will be commemorated with a state historical marker.

The July 1861 battle took place on a section of Bull Run south of Manassas, the site of two other major Civil War battles.

At Blackburn's Ford, Union forces attacked entrenched Confederate troops under the command of Gen. Pierre G.T. Beauregard. The battle involved about 3,000 men on each side; 15 Confederate soldiers were killed and 53 were wounded, while 19 Union soldiers were killed and 64 were wounded.

"It really bothers me that people call this a skirmish," said Mark Trbovich, who lobbied to have the marker erected. "I'll tell you, this is a full-fledged battle. A lot of good men died here, and there's no marker or anything."

The nonprofit group Virginia Civil War Trails will pay the state to erect the marker, which costs from $1,225 to $4,000.

Mitch Bowman, the group's director, said the Blackburn's Ford marker is the 210th to go-up in the last four years, all placed exactly where the event occurred.

The Blackburn's Ford marker will go up in July in a parking lot on the Fairfax-Prince William county line, just off Route 28.

Civil War was never about slavery

IT APPEARS to me that Gov. Jim Gilmore isn't the most knowledgeable in person about the Civil War. And you had agree (March 25 column by Tommy Denton, "Exposing the ugly roots of a tragic myth")?

The North began the Civil War because the South seceded from the Union. Lincoln acknowledged that the war was to deny Southern states their freedom from the Union. He knew that accepting secession by the Southern states would be a huge step in the wrong direction. I think he knew that together we stand, divided we fall.

Lincoln made it perfectly clear that slavery wasn't the reason for the war. Why would he think that when there was slavery north of the Mason-Dixon Line? It was never about slavery. Being a died-in-the-wool Southerner, it grieves me to say that Lincoln was correct (and brave) in what he did.

Our greatness in this nation is due to our forefathers fighting this battle, getting it over with and moving on to make this the great nation that we have today.

When Denton and I have bit the dust with our toes up, the Civil War between the South and North will still be a subject of great emotional discus:

UDC donation was overlooked

THE JAN. 31 news article ("Trail to link Roanoke to Civil War past") was very interesting, but left out an important fact about the project.

The Virginia Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy, donated property to the Hanging Rock Foundation, which was instrumental in obtaining the Phase I Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act grant.
That real estate consists of Hanging Rock and Buzzard's Roost. The Roost is the highest point in the proposed parks and will eventually be developed as an overlook of the battle site.

The article explained the Hincheer and Norfolk Southern donations, but mo failed to mention the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

The Roanoke Times has previously had very good coverage of the work of the Hanging Rock Foundation. The citizens of the Roanoke Valley appreciate this, but we want all the information about ongoing projects.

President: Daughters of the Confederacy, this day we are gathered together in the sight of God to strengthen the bonds that unite us in a common cause, to renew the vows of loyalty to our sacred principles, to do homage unto the memory of the gallant Confederate defenders, and to perpetuate the fame of their noble deeds unto succeeding generations. To this end, we invoke the aid of our Lord. Hear my prayer, O God; attend unto my prayer.

Response by all present: From the end of the earth will I cry unto Thee when my heart is overwhelmed; lead me to the rock that is higher than I.

President: For Thou, Lord, art good and ready to forgive and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon Thee.

Response by all present: Give ear, O Lord, unto my prayer and attend to the voice of my supplications.

President: Prayer – Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we adore Thy love and providence in the history of our country, and especially would we thank Thee for our Confederate history. We thank Thee for its pure record of virtue, valor, and sacrifice, and for the inspiring reflections that despite its bitter disappointments and sorrows, it proclaims for us to all the world that we came through its years of trial and struggle with our battered shields pure, our character as a patriotic and courageous people untarnished, and nothing to regret in our defense of the rights and honor of our Southland. Give us grace, our Heavenly Father, faithfully to accept Thy will concerning us, and make us all to glorify Thee in a sincere obedience to Thy Holy Commandments, through the merits and mediation of Thy Son, our only Savior, Jesus Christ. Amen.

All present: The Lord's Prayer - Our Father, Who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

President: And now, by the authority in me vested as President of the Virginia Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy, I do hereby declare this 105th Annual Convention open and ready for business.

In Virginia

The roses nowhere bloom so white As in Virginia.

The sunshine nowhere shines so bright As in Virginia.

The birds sing nowhere quite so sweet, And nowhere hearts so brightly beat, For heaven and earth both seem to meet Down in Virginia.

There nowhere is a land so fair
As old Virginia.
So full of joy and free of eare,
As in Virginia.
And I believe that Happy Land
The Lord's prepared for mortal man
Is built exactly on the plan
Of Old Virginia.

The days are never quite so long fis in Virginia.

Nor quite so filled with happy song fis in Virginia.

And when my time has come to die, Just take me back and let me lie.

Glose where the James goes rolling by, Down in Virginia.

Mildred Childe Lee Her Recipes

Croquettes

Take cold meat or fresh meat, with grated ham, fat and lean, chopped very fine—add one-half as much stale bread grated, salt, pepper, and nutmeg, one tablespoonful catsup, a lump of butter.

Knead all well together—if not soft enough add cream or gravy. Make in cakes the shape of a pear; dip them in the yolk of an egg beaten, roll in dried bread crumbs, and fry a light brown.

Marguerites

Cream together one pound of sugar and one pound of butter very light. Beat the yolks of six eggs; sift one and one-half pound of flour into the eggs, butter, and sugar; one teaspoonful of mixed spices, one-half glassful of rose water. Stir the whole well, and roll it on the board till it is half an inch thick; cut in cakes and bake quickly. When cold, spread the surface of each cake with marmalade. Beat the whites of four eggs light, and add enough powdered sugar to make them as thick as icing. Flavor it with lemon, and put it on top of each cake. Put the cakes in the oven, and as soon as they are of a pale brown, take them out.

STRATFORD HALL PLANTATION

Robert E. Lee Memorial Association, Inc. Stratford, Virginia 22558 804-493-8038

July 19, 2000

Miss Rachel W. Craft, President William Watts Chapter, UDC 2852 Floraland Drive, N.W. Roanoke, Virginia 24012

Dear Miss Craft,

On behalf of the Robert E. Lee Memorial Association and Stratford Hall Plantation, I, once again, wish to thank the William Watts Chapter of the UDC for their generous gift of the very beautiful gown which the chapter donated to Stratford Hall Plantation in October 1998.

The dress-from the estate of Mabel Cumbow Ruskin, and a gift from Robert E. Lee to his daughter-in-law, Rena Lee who willed it to Mabel Ruskin-is an important addition to our textile collection. More importantly, because the Robert E. Lee Memorial Association has so few Lee objects in its collection, the gown's Lee attribution makes the gift even more meaningful.

Your UDC chapter might also be interested in knowing that the Lee gown was one of the pieces that was placed on display in the Jessie Ball duPont Memorial Library when members of the Costume Society of America visited Stratford on June 5, 2000.

Stratford's Visitor Center is currently undergoing renovation. Phase I has been completed—the Preservation Gallery, the Changing and Archaeology Galleries, and the Reception Area. Shortly, work will begin on Phase II—the Lee Gallery, scheduled for completion June 30, 2001. It is our plan to display the gown in this gallery and we hope that your chapter will plan another visit to the plantation to see the newly renovated Visitor Center and Rena Lee's gown.

Sincerely,

Joyce W. Wellford

THE EXHIBITION

The Museum of the Confederacy is commemorating Robert E. Lee throughout 2001 with an exploration into the life of this American icon. Don't miss your opportunity to explore the largest and most comprehensive exhibition of Lee items ever, amassed from The Museum's world-class collection and other significant artifacts borrowed from private and public collections.

"The Museum of the Confederacy has extraordinary collections, and the items that relate to Robert E. Lee are especially rich. They coax us out of everyday and place us in the company of a truly great human being."

Emory M. Thomas Regents Professor of History University of Georgia

Can anybody say they know [him]? —Mary Chesnut

Everybody and everything... loves Colonel Lee.

—A family friend

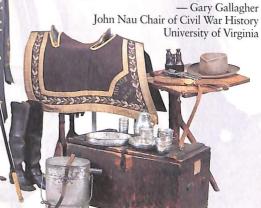

It is well that war is so terrible-we should grow too fond of it!

-R.E. Lee

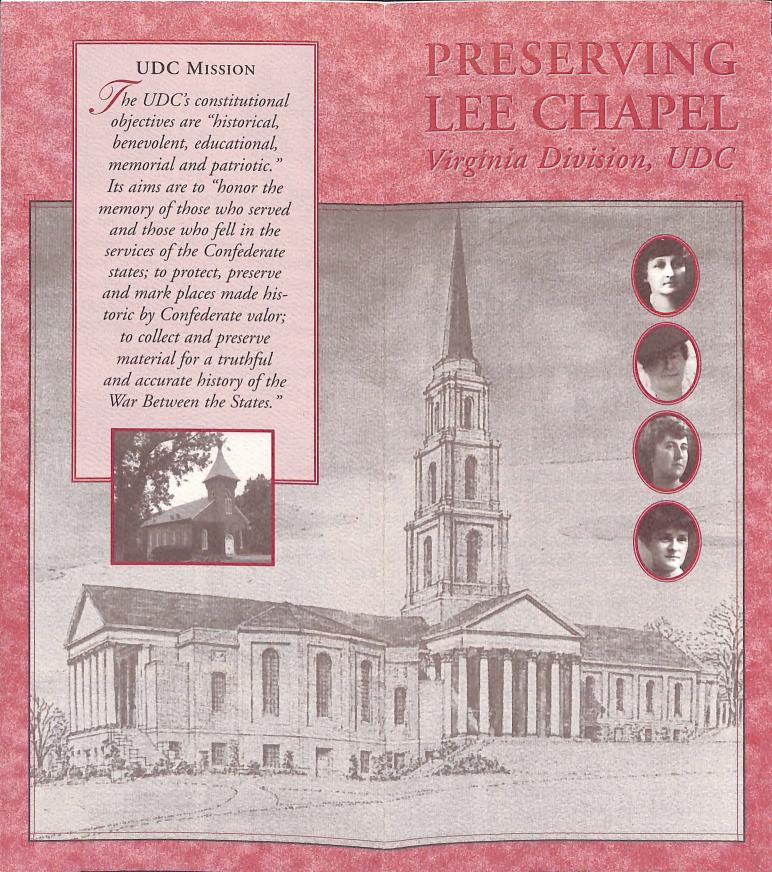

The Museum of the Confederacy has put together a splendid exhibit on Robert E. Lee. Drawn principally from the Museum's own collections, it combines important objects that belonged to Lee, documents, prints, and artworks in an engaging and revealing treatment. Anyone interested in Lee should be certain to see this exhibit.

In Europe, the ink barely was dry on the Treaty of Versailles, officially ending the First World War. At home, emotions were boiling over issues of Prohibition and women's suffrage. It was a restless and confrontational time, a backdrop against which another drama erupted in Lexington, Va.: the fight to preserve Lee Chapel on the Washington and Lee University campus.

The story surrounding the most controversial event in W&L's architectural history unfolded in 1919 when Henry Louis Smith, then president of the University, introduced a plan to replace the tiny Victorian brick chapel that Gen. Robert E. Lee had built in 1867 with a new building that would serve as a mausoleum and a large University auditorium.

COVER: THE ARCHI-TECTURAL DRAWING THAT IGNITED THE LEE CHAPEL CONTROVERSY. Lee served as president of the University, then Washington College, from 1865 until his death in 1870 and was buried in the Chapel.

Smith's reasons were three, the first being the practical reality that the Chapel had become a firetrap with a dangerous heating system and a leaky roof. Smith felt a new structure would be more harmonious with the neo-classical buildings on the Front Campus, and that it would be a better monument to Lee, whose original Chapel had grown too small for the tradition of bringing all the students together for special occasions. Key to Smith's vision of a modern university was gaining the approval of W&L trustees, the Lee family and the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

NEW CHAPEL

THE W&L, VIRGINIA DIVISION ALLIANCE As the final resting place of R. E. Lee, the upkeep of Lee Chapel has been of prime importance to the Virginia Division since its founding. Special mileposts of the organization include:

1895 The Virginia Division, UDC, is founded.

1897 The Mary Custis Lee Chapter, UDC, is founded in Lexington.

Created and funded the position of Lee Chapel custodian (tour guide), a position that continues today, and undertook development of an endowment to ensure an annual donation to the University. The original goal of the Lee Chapel and Mausoleum Fund, $30,000, was achieved in 1945. The Virginia Division continues to augment the endowment corpus and strives to increase its annual contributions to W&L.

MRS. REID WHITE

THE UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY, VIRGINIA DIVISION

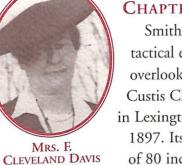

Organized in 1894, one of the oldest patriotic women's groups, the UDC was influential in erecting monuments to Confederate soldiers throughout the South in the aftermath of the War Between the States, and their money-raising ability was critical to Smith's plan. (The Virginia Division was organized in 1895, the first statewide group within the national organization.)

Smith won approval for his plan from W&L trustees easily, and the Lee family opted not to take a stand. Then came the test. To win the UDC's endorsement, Smith first made overtures in 1919 to the Virginia Division, which had just endowed funds for a full-time custodian (tour guide) for the Chapel at his request. Next, he gave a rousing address about Lee before the UDC General Convention in 1920. Then in 1921, bypassing the Virginia Division, Smith presented his plans to change the Chapel at the UDC's annual convention in St. Louis. The convention endorsed the plan and pledged to raise $100,000 toward the effort.

1929 Placed Confederate battle flags in the Chapel's Statue Chamber. These flags were among the collection returned in 1903 by the U.S. War Department to the Commonwealth of Virginia and given by the Virginia Assembly to the Museum of the Confederacy.

MARY LEE CUSTIS CHAPTER

Smith made one very large tactical error. He completely overlooked the Mary Lee Custis Chapter of the UDC in Lexington, founded in 1897. Its membership roll of 80 included some of the most prominent women in town, and the group also ran the only hospital.

Smith may have chosen to bypass the Lexington chapter because of criticism that the University hadn't taken proper care of the Chapel. He also might have thought that the women would not oppose him in public. He was wrong.

Mrs. Reid White of Lexington, the wife of a prominent doctor and a hospital volunteer, penned the first letter of hundreds that chapter members would write protesting the plans for the Chapel. The old building, they said, was more closely associated with Lee than any other. Mrs. F. Cleveland Davis introduced two resolutions suggesting that the Chapel be considered a "shrine," sacred and inviolate. Another Lexingron member, Miss Jennie Hopkins, enlisted the support of an uncle, Matthew W. Paxton, editor of the Rockbridge County News, who sided with the women, opposing destruction of the original building.

1937 Donated money toward the purchase of an electric organ for the Lee Chapel, as the original organ of 1872 was in disrepair. The original since has been restored.

POWER OF THE PEN

IENNIE HOPKINS

The Lexington women won the support of the Virginia Division, and its new president, Mrs. Ann Norton Otey Scott, helped carry the protest to the general convention the next November. But the convention group scolded its Virginia members and stood by its decision to endorse Smith's plan.

Meanwhile, Smith proposed a compromise that would leave the old Chapel intact but add additions to double the size. Architectural drawings of five variations in styles from Wren-like Georgian to Baroque would have altered the Chapel's look completely.

The Virginians would not relent. Their battle cry was heard by the Baltimore Sun, and the Richmond Evening Leader. Another letter campaign caught the attention of President Woodrow Wilson, then retired, and English writer John Drinkwater. Congressmen, senators, Lady Nancy Astor, the Colonial Dames and the Daughters of the American Revolution joined the fray.

1950s Funded effort to conserve Confederate flags.

Participated in the interment of the remains of Gen. Lee's horse, Traveller, on Chapel grounds. Markers were placed on the grave and at his former stable located behind the University president's house.

CHAPEL PRESERVED

Smith and University trustees retreated on Jan. 19, 1924, Lee's 117th birthday, withdrawing their proposal. Later that year, they committed $6,000 to fireproof the old Chapel.

The Chapel since has undergone a renovation in 1960-61, funded by Ford Motor Co., and a major renovation at the Lee Chapel Museum was completed in 1998. Today, the Chapel is a National Historic Landmark, and the Virginia Division, UDC, continues to support the University in telling the story of Robert E. Lee.

William Watts Chapter 809, Roanoke

William Watts Chapter 809 President Miss Rachel W. Craft is extremely proud that the Chapter and Roanoke Mayor Mr. Ralph Smith were able to donate one of Rena Lee's dresses to Stratford Hall Plantation.

Robert E. Lee honored his daughterin-law with the new dress just before she married into the Lee family, Rena kept the beige, silk gown with its many ruffles, tucks, brocade, lace pleats and buttons until her death, when it was willed along with several other items to Mabel Cumbow Ruskin. The items remained in the Ruskin estate until 1980, when Mr. Douglas R. Aust of Pulaski, Virginia, purchased them and put them on display in his museum.

In 1990, the Aust family auctioned off the dress and several other items. The well-preserved gown was purchased by Roanoke businessman Mr. Ralph Smith for $500. Documentation of the whereabouts of the gown since it came into the Lee family proved its authenticity. Mr. Smith, who won election as Roanoke City Mayor in May of 2000, donated the dress to William Watts Chupter. The Chapter has since presented the dress to the Stratford Hall Plantation Museum, where it was accepted by Director of Cultural Resources Ms. Joyce Wellford.

"The dress... is an important addition to our textile collection," Ms. Wellford wrote in a letter to the Chapter. "More importantly, because the Robert E. Lee Memorial Association has so few Lee objects in its collection, the gown's Lee attribution makes the gift even more meaningful." The dress was displayed in the Jessie Ball duPont Memorial Library when members of the Costume Society of America visited Stratford on June 5, 2000.

Stratford's visitor center is currently undergoing renovation. Phase I, which includes the Preservation Gallery, the Changing and Archaeology Galleries and the reception area, has been completed. Phase II, the Lee Gallery, is scheduled for completion on June 30, 2001. Rena Lee's gown will find its permanent home in this gallery.

The Star-Spangled Banner

Oh, say! Can you see, by the dawn's early light,
What so proudly we hailed at the twilight's last gleaming?
Whose broad stripes and bright stars, thro' the perilous fight,
O'er the ramparts we watch'd, were so gallantly streaming?
And the rockets' red glare, the bombs bursting in air,
Gave proof thro' the night that our flag was still there.
Oh, say, does that Star-Spangled Banner yet wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?

Carry Me Back To Old Virginia

Carry me back to old Virginny,
There's where the cotton and the corn and taters grow.
There's where the birds warble sweet in the springtime.
There's where the old darkey's heart am long'd to go.
There's where I labored so hard for old Masssa.
Day after day in the field of yellow corn.
No place on earth do I love more sincerely,
Than old Virginny, the state where I was born.

Carry me back to old Virginny, There's where the cotton and the corn and tatters grow. There's where the birds warble sweet in the springtime, There's where the old darkey's heart am long'd to go.

Dixie's Land

I wish I was in the land of cotton,
Old times dar am not forgotten,
Look away! Look away! Dixie Land
In Dixie Land where I was born,
Early on one frosty mornin'
Look away! Look away! Dixie Land.

Den I wish I was in Dixie, Hooray! Hooray! In Dixie Land I'll take my stand, To lib and die in Dixie; Away, away, away down south in Dixie. Away, away, away down south in Dixie.

Soldiers were 'patriots who loved our Southland and suffered in its defense'

Confederate groups honor black soldiers

The United Daughters of the Confederacy dedicated memorials to three black soldiers from Franklin County.

By KEISHA STEWART THE ROANOKE TIMES

The time came for Creed Holland to get the recognition he was due.

He was a black slave, but also a Confederate soldier.

And for such, Creed Holland was honored Saturday morning at a graveside ceremony in a small cemetery behind Riverview Baptist Church in Rocky Mount.

The Jubal Early chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy dedicated Confederate memorial markers to Creed Holland and two other black Confederate soldiers, also named Holland, from Franklin County.

Hazel Holland Davis, a member of the Jubal Early chapter and greatgranddaughter of a Confederate soldier, organized the service as part of a chapterwide project to identify Confederate soldiers' graves in Franklin County.

The three Holland soldiers, of no known relation to each other or to Davis, worked as slaves on Thomas J. Holland's 732-acre farm in Glade Hill. Thomas Holland was Davis' greatgreat-grandfather.

The service was a rare memorial that honored the little-known Confederate soldiers: enslaved black soldiers.

JOSH MELTZER / THE ROANOKE TIMES George Holland is one of several members of his family who attended Saturday's service dedicating memorial markers to his grandfather Creed Holland and two other slaves who fought for the Confederacy.

Soldiers

and members of the United Daughters of the Confederacy and Sons of Confederate Veterans performed the ceremony, which included poems, speeches, prayers and customary military funeral rites such as cannonball volleys and rifle shots.

William Daniel Holland, great-grandson of Creed Holland, welcomed the crowd of about 60 people. He called the service a gathering of all people.

"Today is a day of unification," said William Daniel Holland, 33, of Atlanta.

Sam Lougheed, Virginia president of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, described the three black soldiers as "patriots who loved our Southland and suffered in its defense." Lougheed, of Stafford, called the three Hollands "Confederate heroes."

Brag Bowling, state commander of the Sons of Confederate Veterans, used the service as a platform.

"Southern heritage is becoming a cutting social, cultural and political issue in the landscape of Virginia," Bowling said. He urged the crowd to back those behind a monument protection bill that would thwart efforts to rename buildings and monuments.

Sen. Charles Hawkins, R-Chatham, in a spirited speech, pointed to a female re-enactor dressed in a black dress and veil, standing before Creed Holland's grave.

"We need to come to grips with the ghosts of our past by understanding our history," Hawkins said. "We need to understand this history if we are to grow and prosper."

Linda Stanley of the Franklin County Historical Society said the Confederate government required slaveowners to offer a certain percentage of their slaves to the war effort, possibly explaining the three Holland men's involvement in the war.

According to federal pension records, Creed Holland worked as a teamster, hauling supplies for soldiers. Cornelius Holland worked under Jubal Early as a cook. Claiborne Holland performed breastwork, which involved erecting earthen walls from which soldiers protected themselves in battle.

Davis and William Daniel Holland knew of their families' connection. But both families found out about Creed Holland's status as a Confederate veteran this year, William Daniel Holland said.

Davis, 61, a retired teacher living on her family's Glade Hill farm, asked Creed Holland's descendants if they were interested in having a Confederate marker and a ceremony at Creed Holland's grave. They agreed.

William Daniel Holland, along with his brother John Wayne Holland, 47, a Yokohama tire finisher from Roanoke, and another brother are members of the Sons of Confederate Veterans. Their sister Wanda Holland Chewning, 46, an artist living in Penhook, is a member of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

Their grandfather Sam Holland, 75, of Glade Hill, a retired worker for Fleetwood Homes, appreciated the ceremony for Creed Holland. "I'm glad they remember him," he said.

At the end of the ceremony, Sons of Confederate Veterans Commander Robert "Red" Barbour presented a folded Confederate flag to Sam Holland as Creed Holland's oldest known living relative.

The second part of the ceremony ended at Davis' Glade Hill farm off Virginia 40. There, Daughters members placed two magnolia wreaths for Cornelius and Claiborne Holland in the Holland family cemetery. Davis cannot find descendants of the two, or their graves.

VIRGINIA

From J. H. Colton's Map of the Southern States - 1862

"The Old Dominion seceded from the Union on April 17, 1861 and on the 30th of that month, a flag was adopted for the independent Commonwealth of Virginia.

Virginia's banner is the Bonnie Blue flag with the star replaced by the seal of the Commonwealth. The seal, which had been adopted during the Revolution, represents the Roman goddess Virtus striking down an allegorical tyrant, his crown dashed to the earth. Both the seal and flag display the Latin motto "SIC SCMPCR TYRANNIS"; which translates as "Ever Thus to Tyrants." The symbol, which had been adopted as Virginia's response to monarchial and parliamentary tyranny in the 1700's would serve as her reply to aggression in the 1860's. In slightly modified form, the flag of 1861 still serves the Commonwealth of Virginia."

President: Daughters of the Confederacy, this day we are gathered together in the sight of God to strengthen the bonds that unite us in a common cause, to renew the vows of loyalty to our sacred principles, to do homage unto the memory of the gallant Confederate defenders, and to perpetuate the fame of their noble deeds unto succeeding generations. To this end, we invoke the aid of our Lord. Hear my prayer, O God; attend unto my prayer.

Response by all present: From the end of the earth will I cry unto Thee when my heart is overwhelmed; lead me to the rock that is higher than I.

President: For Thou, Lord, art good and ready to forgive and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon Thee.

Response by all present: Give ear, O Lord, unto my prayer and attend to the voice of my supplications.

President: Prayer - Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we adore Thy love and providence in the history of our country, and especially would we thank Thee for our Confederate history. We thank Thee for its pure record of virtue, valor, and sacrifice, and for the inspiring reflections that despite its bitter disappointments and sorrows, it proclaims for us to all the world that we came through its years of trial and struggle with our battered shields pure, our character as a patriotic and courageous people untarnished, and nothing to regret in our defense of the rights and honor of our Southland. Give us grace, our Heavenly Father, faithfully to accept Thy will concerning us, and make us all to glorify Thee in a sincere obedience to Thy Holy Commandments, through the merits and mediation of Thy Son, our only Savior, Jesus Christ. Amen.

All present: The Lord's Prayer - Our Father, Who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

President: And now, by the authority in me vested as President of the Virginia Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy®, I do hereby declare this 106th Annual Convention open and ready for business.

Convention Notes

The Valley of Old Shenandoah

The Old Shenandoah Valley is Virginia's pride, with Blue Ridge Mountains standing by her side. The sweetheart of Dixie and daughter of the stars, a dimple in the mountains, the nation admires. Nature bids welcome as you open her door, to the beautiful Valley of Old Shenandoah.

The Shenandoah Valley that is loved so well, with underground castles, where fairies dwell. A national park that lays in her mountains, with its' rivers, brooks, and many fountains. Where Dogwoods bloom and the Robins soar, down in the Valley of Old Shenandoah.

The Shenandoah Valley with a Natural Bridge, and a Skyline Drive on top of the Blue Ridge. Structures of nature and structures of fame, of her natural beauty no tongue can explain. The automobiles hum, and airplanes roar, touring the Valley of Old Shenandoah.

The Shenandoah Valley, the indians did name, with birds, flowers, sunshine and rain.

Towns spring up and fertile lands are tilled, the harvest is great and the garners are filled.

Flowers blooming in the Spring, red apples in the fall, makes Old Shenandoah Valley the garden spot of all.

The Shenandoah Valley, historical and gay, where battles were fought by the Blue and the Gray. She gave of her sons, so bounteous and free, heroes like Jackson and Robert E. Lee. There's banners of history along her roadside telling of the battles and Sheridan's last ride.

The Shenandoah Valley was a war stained path, so let's open our history and remember the past.

Obeying the Commandment Jesus said, "I give unto you, that you love one another, as I have loved you."

Now there is no battle cry or cannon's roar, thank God for peace in the Valley of Old Shenandoah.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE TO THE FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

"I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

THE NATIONAL ANTHEM

O, say can you see, by the dawn's early light,
What so proudly we hail'd at the twilight's last gleaming?
Whose broad stripes and bright stars, thro' the perilous fight,
O'er the ramparts we watched were so gallantly streaming?
And the rockets' red glare, the bombs bursting in air,
Gave proof thro' the night that our flag was still there.
O, say does that Star Spangled Banner yet wave
O'er the land of the free, and the home of the brave?

SALUTE TO THE FLAG OF VIRGINIA

"I salute the flag of Virginia with reverence and patriotic devotion to the "Mother of States and Statesmen", which it represents, the Old Dominion where liberty and independence were born."

CARRY ME BACK TO OLE VIRGINNY

Carry me back to old Virginny, there's where the cotton and the corn and taters grow.

There's where the birds warble sweet in the springtime,
There's where this old darkey's heart am long'd to go.
There's where I labored so hard for Old Massa,
Day after day in the field of yellow corn. No place on earth do I love more sincerely
Than old Virginny the state where I was born.

SALUTE TO THE CONFEDERATE FLAG

"I salute the Confederate Flag with affection, reverence, and undying remembrance.

DIXIE'S LAND

I wish I was in the land of cotton, Old times there are not forgotten,
Look away! Look away! Look away! Dixie Land.

In Dixie Land where I was born, early on one frosty mornin'
Look away! Look away! Look away! Dixie Land.
Den I wish I was in Dixie, Hooray! Hooray!
In Dixie Land I'll take my stand, to live and die in Dixie.
Away, Away, Away down South in Dixie.
Away, Away, Away down South in Dixie.

MY COUNTRY, 'TIS OF THEE

My country, 'tis of Thee, sweet land of Liberty, Of Thee I sing: Land where my fathers died, Land of the pilgrims' pride From every mountainside, Let freedom ring.

AMERICA THE BEAUTIFUL.

Oh, beautiful for spacious skies, for amber waves of grain, for purple mountains majesty above the fruitful plains. America, America, God shed His grace on thee, And crown thy good with brotherhood, from sea to shining sea.

Jumping the broom may be jumping cultures, Va. Beach wedding shows

Q: In the fall, my husband and watched a wedding that was aking place on the beach at Virginia Beach. Everyone was in wedding finery except barefoot. After the groom kissed the bride, he bridesmaid placed a small proom on the sand. The bride and groom stood side by side and hen jumped over the broom.

Obviously this is some kind of tradition but I had never seen it efore and no one I have talked ith knows quite what was going n. Some say it is an African traition, but these people were white so I don't think that is it. Considering the region we live in, I say it is probably Celtic, but what is the reason?

slaves ended up making it part of their marriage ceremonies. In her book "Jumping the Broom" (Jump at the Sun, 995) Harriette Cole recounts a slave's firsthand account of the loor and the couple jumped over it backward. The one who didn't touch the handle would run the household; if oth cleared the broomstick, ney'd have a more genial tarriage.

As Cole explains in her ook, slaves were forbidden marry, yet still craved a mbolic ritual to mark the mion of two people.

They "became inventive," ne wrote. "Out of their creivity came the tradition of mping the broom. The oom itself held spiritual spificance for many African oples, representing the bening of homemaking for a uple."

Flash forward 200 years or so and broom jumping is a very hip thing at black weddings. So much so that people are making special brooms just for wedding ceremonies.

"I would most definitely say the trend is still growing," wrote Jennifer Goldsberry, owner of JumpingBrooms com, in an e-mail. "Our Web site traffic is steadily rising along with our sales. In addition, the tradition is receiving increasing media coverage.

Goldsberry, who said most of her sales come from large cities, sells about 30 brooms a month. She expects that number to double soon.

"Although some couples wish to follow the wedding practices of their parents or grandparents, many couples first hear of the broomjumping ceremony while utilizing Internet resources during their wedding planning."

But, as you say, the people you saw were not black. Perhaps they were Wiccans.

"Jumping the broom is also widely accepted as part of the Pagan 'hand-fasting' ceremony, a ritual involving tying the hands at the wrists and jumping over a ceremonial broom," wrote Goldsberry.

Although she does not ask about her customers' reasons for buying a broom, she said she guesses about 90 percent are black and 10 percent are
